

In order to produce proficient putting on a consistent basis, it is important you understand your own personal patterns and biases along with how they function together to produce end results.

The putting analyst will work closely with you in order to help you realize optimal processes based upon your individual physiological, neurological and psychological self.

An understanding of the objectives of you as the individual is necessary for the development of an appropriate program.

Technology now plays a major role in golf coaching and advancements in this field now allow coaches to diagnose player tendencies more accurately and efficiently. Data provided through putting analysis systems now enable coaches to provide pupils with detailed evaluations of their performance with the putter, along with the evidence that improvement has been made following change.